11. Development of the web browser Under normal circumstances, you would use your computer to browse the Internet. But, you might be interested in a feature that lets you control your computer without actually using it. By using the browser, you would rather do something else. For instance, you could access your favorite website while watching TV or doing some work. If you would like to experience that yourself, follow these steps: How to add the web browser to the panel in Windows 10 Windows 10 is the latest Windows operating system, and it comes with its own web browser named Edge. It is a good example of a web browser that supports tabs, bookmarks, and links. It is also more compact than its predecessor, Internet Explorer. Let's see how to add the web browser to the panel in Windows 10. Step 1: Turn on the Cortana feature. To do this, open the Settings app and head over to System > Search & Cortana. Step 2: If you see the green plus sign next to the Cortana icon, it means that the feature is enabled. Now, scroll down and you should see three options on the left-hand side, as shown in the figure below. Figure 1: You will find three options on

A keyboard macro extension for Windows, KEYMACRO, the best and essential one for most keyboard-loving professionals, should be downloaded, installed, and activated immediately. Why this is not already installed? Due to its complexity, KEYMACRO is just not as easily integrated into the operating system as a lot of other extensions. Therefore, the developer decided to give this extension its own settings page and also an option to set it as the default one. KEYMACRO is the best keyboard extension for Windows. It is specially designed for Windows to bring a whole new level of functionality and an attractive look to the default keyboard. Most users come with the habit of associating their favorite shortcut combinations with any web-based services or software, while with this extension it is possible to access any of them with just a single keyboard shortcut. Not only that, but with the combination of buttons and functions, you can change the number of levels you wish to go up or down, and even change the order of the buttons. In addition, you can assign a single keyboard shortcut to a set of buttons and make it work like a traditional combo, where you press the buttons in the exact order. Adding or editing a shortcut key combination This section will show you how to add or edit a shortcut key for any button. You will first be required to open the file C:\Program Files\KEYMACRO\KEYmacro_v.1.6.0.0\keystroke_settings.xml. The default version can be used as well, but it has been designed for latest Windows versions, therefore, make sure you always download the latest one. You can go into this file directly or using Windows File Explorer by pressing CTRL + O. In the file, you will find an xml that has all the custom keyboard shortcuts. Each of these shortcuts is assigned with a tag and it's possible to edit or add these tags too. For example, in the tag button, you can find the following element, it's a shortcut tag: It says that when the G5 button is pressed, the G button should be executed. Thus, the shortcut key combination for the G button would be assigned with the key attribute as buttons.G5, and the value of the attribute is the current tag, which is g in this case. The last thing we have to do is add a new shortcut key combination. To do that

Windows 10 is widely regarded as a better version of its older cousins. We got new functionalities that we could hardly imagine Windows 8 offering us. Moreover, Windows 10 is considered as a major improvement over its predecessors. But the fact is the operating system hasn't received a complete overhaul. Despite new features, Windows 10 is basically the same operating system. With this in mind, Windows Defender is getting some cosmetic enhancements in Windows 10 Insider Build 17062. The built-in security tool has now been redesigned and many of its features have been upgraded. What's new in Windows Defender The Windows Defender has a new design that has been created with a simplified layout and a few new items. Among these items are the feature that highlights suspicious files, the new shutdown options, and an improved database. Let's start with the revamped interface. This update no longer includes the default Windows Defender. The new update has a new name, Security Center, and it is accessible from the Settings app. The screenshot below shows the Settings page in which you can change the name and description for the Security Center. The page for the Security Center in Settings has a new icon with the name of Windows Defender on it. You also get the option of enabling/disabling the system guardian, which is the new name for the Windows Defender in Windows 10. The system guardian feature is now considered as the one and only protection tool for Windows 10 users. Users who are using an older version of Windows can get the old-fashioned Windows Defender by running the Windows Defender version from Windows 10 in the background. It works the same way the old-fashioned Windows Defender does: scanning and analyzing files for malicious behavior. The system guardian feature is also accessible from the Settings app. Lock screen app Lock screen and More The update also brings an entirely new design and changes to many settings. First of all, the Lock Screen application has now been renamed as More and it is included in Windows Defender as a separate tool. The More tool will not only show you notifications from various apps, but it also has an option that enables you to add your own images to the background. Settings Lock screen app More You can add your own images or even link to a webpage using the Settings tool. The third major change is the layout of the Settings page. The new Windows 10 Settings page has an entirely new layout that has been designed for easier navigation and better organization.

That is the first thing I tell any new volunteer. The next thing I tell them is that when they are asked, they don't say 'yes'. They say 'no'. We always have room for new volunteers because we try to have at least two volunteers at a time. What are some of the most common things volunteers have said about their experience? Volunteers have always said that the most amazing thing about the week is the fact that no one knows what is going to happen. Sometimes, things that are on your checklist get scratched off. Sometimes, things that you didn't even plan for happen. This is one of the many reasons why you don't need a plan. It also makes volunteers realize that we are part of a global community and the world is just a much bigger place than we thought. In general, the consensus among volunteers is that their experience was truly one of a life time. They look back on the week and wonder where their lives would be right now if they had never stepped foot on the island.
