Our News, Tips & Trends 4 Natural Ingredient Soaps and Natural Shampoos You Could Try By Charlotte Erickson on May 3, 2018 Share It's no secret that the average American uses at least an additional half a bar of soap per wash. But did you know that a majority of today's new products are not only made with more hazardous chemicals but can also have hefty price tags? It's no secret that the average American uses at least an additional half a bar of soap per wash. But did you know that a majority of today's new products are not only made with more hazardous chemicals but can also have hefty price tags? If you're looking for ways to get the same cleansing power while maintaining your environmental footprint, look to these four naturally-based products. Read on to discover tips on how to use them and which ones are right for your skin type. 1. Raw Honey Soap Newly published research shows that a product made with raw honey is just as effective as store-bought soaps but with far fewer chemicals. Why? Honey is packed with antibacterial and antimicrobial properties. Plus, it's hydrating and immediately moisturizing. To make your own, simply use a bar of the natural soap to create a paste and spread it onto a kitchen sponge. Wrap the sponge in a kitchen towel and let it soak in the honey for two to three hours to produce a lather. Rinse the soap with water after. The mixture is shelf-stable for up to four weeks. 2. Baby's Bath Soap Since nothing can beat your little one's natural scent, our next pick is a product that brings it straight to your back yard. Once you finish cleaning up the rest of the kids, simply take the leftover lather and use it to mop up spills and clean your backyard. 3. Coconut Oil While it may not be as natural as your baby's 79a2804d6b
