Jean de la Flor Jean de la Flor (died 1555) was a French composer of the Renaissance. He is best known today for having been a close associate of composer Clément Janequin (c.1505-c.1559), for whom he may have written many of the earliest known motets. Little is known of de la Flor's life, but he is mentioned in contemporary records in the same context as his collaborator Janequin. A member of the scholarly Parisian La Chapelle family, de la Flor was a member of the prestigious Chambre de la Musique. His name is often given as "Jean Flor". A motet composed by de la Flor in 1529 has survived, the first extant work by a composer other than Janequin (some twenty others have survived). It is dedicated to Mathurin Bigot, the royal music master of Henry II, and has been called "an exhibition of refinement of taste".
