Q: How to determine if a number is in a list of numbers I am using a number of lists to store all the numbers that have been generated. All the numbers are stored in the list in increasing order. I am looking for a simple algorithm that will determine if a number is in a list of numbers.

A: The problem with the naive approach is that you have to compare with every item in the collection, and that is $O(n)$ if your collection is pre-sorted or $O(n \log n)$ otherwise. So, assuming you have an efficient way of finding an item in the collection, you want to do something like this: `collection.Find(n =>...);` // calling is not important

This uses a binary search on your items' list to find the correct item. It checks every item against n , so the number of comparisons you make will be proportional to the difference between the largest number in the collection and the smallest number in the collection.

Postprandial subclinical hypercortisolism in a patient with polycystic ovarian syndrome. We describe the case of a patient with polycystic ovarian syndrome and clinical features of Cushing's disease (lymphadenopathy and striae), in whom the 24-hour urinary free cortisol showed a normal (17.7 nmol) and decreased 24-hour-urinary free cortisol/24-hour-urinary free cortisol ratio (0.9), and the nocturnal salivary cortisol was low (0.10 nmol). The variable excretion of cortisol in urine and saliva was mainly due to a statistically significant increase in the 24-hour-urinary excretion of cortisol at 16:00 h, with a parallel increase in plasma cortisol at 16:00 h (4.1 nmol/l) and at the next morning's blood sample (12.1 nmol/l). The subclinical hypercortisolism was relieved by a low-dose long-acting steroid (desiccated silodosin, 8 mg, twice daily) and the patient maintained normal menstrual cycles for one year. This is the first report 04aeff104c
