Macro Recorder is designed to record & play a sequence of keystrokes, also known as Macros. You can use Macros to record long commands that are too hard to remember. Macros can be recorded in various languages. Start typing your command, press record and the application will save the sequence of keystrokes to a macro. Then later you can press the play button to re-play your recorded Macros. Pressing the record button on keyboard starts the recording. Pressing play button starts playing the recorded Macros. Format of the Macros: The macros are saved as a sequence of comma-separated keystrokes. For example, to copy a file you will have to type: copy, c, o, p, y, e, t and hit enter. To copy a file to a different folder you will have to type: cp, c, o, p, y, e, t, d and hit enter. Features: Macro Recorder can also record the text input to clipboard by hitting the "Ctrl+C" key. You can also use the "Ctrl+V" key to paste the text from the clipboard. Editing Macros: You can edit the macro to add a word or sentence. You can also delete or replace the sequence of keystrokes. Macro Recorder can also record a sequence of keystrokes and mouse clicks. The program can save the data to a file or to the clipboard. You can also edit the data in the file or in the clipboard. Actions before Macros: Before the macro is played, the program displays the name of the macro, the number of keystrokes, the text in the clipboard and the file you are working on. You can also edit the data in the file and the text in the clipboard. Actions after Macros: After the macro is played, the program displays the sequence of keystrokes. You can edit the data in the file and the text in the clipboard. Macro Recorder can save the Macros to a file or to the

The purification and characterization of the enzyme from the pathogenic yeast Candida albicans. A protease has been purified to homogeneity from the pathogenic yeast, Candida albicans. It exhibits a molecular weight of 42 000 and consists of two identical subunits with a molecular weight of approximately 30 000. The enzyme is a cysteine protease and exhibits the typical characteristics of the papain superfamily. The major protease inhibitor, pepstatin A, is a potent and reversible inhibitor of the enzyme ($K_i = 5.7 \text{ nM}$). The inhibitor is not only active against the purified enzyme, but is also effective in inhibiting the activity of the whole organism. Pepstatin A prevents penetration of the cells by the yeast.

[Necrotizing granulomatous lymphadenitis: diagnostic and therapeutic aspects]. In 1.7% of patients with malignant lymphoma, necrotizing granulomatous lymphadenitis is observed. The condition presents in 90% of cases as a cervical adenitis. We present 2 cases of necrotizing granulomatous lymphadenitis and a review of the literature. The two patients reported here were in stage III of diffuse lymphatic leukaemia and had intracytoplasmic inclusions of Hodgkin's lymphoma in the lymph nodes. Necrotizing granulomatous lymphadenitis is an important differential diagnosis. The treatment of choice is radical removal of the lymph nodes.
