Hello, I have a problem with my macbook. It uses mac os X Maverik Yosemite v10.10.5. I recently upgraded to macOS el Capitan v10.11.6 where Matlab does. (b) are mutually displaced in the positive direction relative to each other. During the heating period, a diaphragm mirror is heated as indicated by the arrow in FIG. 5D and is gradually curved. FIG. 5E shows the conditions in which the diaphragm mirror has been distorted to a predetermined curvature at that point in time. In this figure, the curved diaphragm mirror is indicated by broken lines, and the rear-most one of the two diaphragm mirrors is indicated by numerals 1, the leading one by numerals 2, and the mirror rear-most in the heating mode is indicated by numerals 3. In the conditions shown in FIG. 5E, the mirror 2 has been displaced in the positive direction relative to the mirror 1. As a result, the effective angle of incidence of light and the effective angle of reflection deviate from each other. As a result, a reflection angle of light from a light source (not shown in the figure) incident to the mirror 2 varies with time. This phenomenon is called "jitter" in the art of thermoplastic processing. As a result, the re-reflection rate at the mirror 1 varies, and hence, in the example shown in FIG. 5B, the quantity of reflected light varies with time. The depth of cure of cured ink on a substrate during the heating period can be, for example, from about 20 to 50.mu.m. At a density of thermal conduction during the heating period of, for example, 0.2 mm, the time required for the movement of the diaphragm mirror 1 is about 10 seconds. At a density of thermal conduction during the heating period of, for example, 0.5 mm, it takes about 20 seconds for the movement of the diaphragm mirror 1. Therefore, the movement of the diaphragm mirror 1 is preferably started after the substrate has been left stationary for about 20 seconds.

However, when the movement of the diaphragm mirror 1 is started after a lapse of about 20 seconds, the re-reflection rate 04aeff104c
