The image you are viewing initially is the review image. A comment panel is displayed next to it as shown in the figure below. You can change the size of the comment panel, the size of the preview, and toggle the comment panel open/closed by clicking the comments panel button. Clicking the comments button displays comments on the preview. If the preview has not been updated since the comment panel was last closed, or converted to a browser window, thumbnail mode is displayed on the preview for convenience. I set this to "Off" for testing because I wanted the file to limit my exposure to the handwritten text that was not working as expected. This turned off the thumbnail mode showing the images in a preview window and made it easier to read and test the contents of the input dialogue. The pane size defaults to 30% of the preview window which means you can fit about 7 comment panels on the screen at a time. By default, the comment panel is collapsed but if you want to hide the comment panel, click the "Hide Panel" button. When you click "Show Panel" the layout is restored to the standard collapsed/expanded layout. The size of the panel is also based on the current zoom display of the graphics.
