Misc go to the User Control Panel, DPI and scale the graphics. Even then, it might not match what you want. I had to get a new monitor to get proper scaling for my HP deskjet with Win8 so I wanted the best of both worlds. Make sure you're scaling the DPI with the monitor's native DPI. A trick I used to get the desired size was adding "*100" to the end of the "1280x800" monitor size. For example, I used a 14" monitor with Win8. I scaled it to 1920x1400. But Windows wanted to scale it to 1680x1440. But if I then added the multiplier "*100" to the end of the monitor size, Windows accepted it! So I didn't have to manually re-size it every time. I was able to uncheck "Display scaling" on the Display applet and size the cursor in the end by hand. Is this the same on all versions of windows? Because I bought a 2nd monitor to use to make sure I'm a happy camper before I made a switch Click to expand... Yes, it's the same. Microsoft added a hardware accelerated scaling feature in Windows 8.1, but I think you can disable it in Windows 8 and earlier. I was able to uncheck "Display scaling" on the Display applet and size the cursor in the end by hand. Does anyone know what specific keyboard combination it is for display scaling under 8? I am happy with the way Win7 scaling worked with the hot keys, but when I installed Win8, the display got all tight. I found the hot keys for display scaling, but they didn't seem to work. I haven't found any info in the docs. Does anyone know what specific keyboard combination it is for display scaling under 8? I am happy with the way Win7 scaling worked with the hot keys, but
